TURKS PURSUE BRITISH

The British in order to conceal their defeat on the Turk front, told the population of the surrounding territory that they had concluded peace, but that the rapid prosecution of the fighting revealed the real state of things.

Three aeroplanes of our taken from the enemy have been repaired and are being used against the enemy.

Dardanelles front: An enemy cruiser which started firing on the Turkish left wing was forced by the fire of Turkish torpedo boats to withdraw. An enemy cruiser of the Agamemnon type shelled the hospital at Kilitli Pinar and killed four and wounded twenty soldiers.

FIGHT TO SAVE MURDERERS ENDS; THEY HANG, SAYS HUNT

Chief Executive Says as Far as He Is Concerned Law Will Take its Course; Time Unripe for End of Hangings

"The execution scheduled to occur at the penitentiary at Florence on December 10 will positively be carried out, and no further interference is going to take place in connection with these hangings."

Governor George W. P. Hunt yesterday afternoon in the above words settled all fears which might have been entertained by the champions of capital punishment that some further attempt might be made to delay the execution set for one week from today. Following the postponement of the hanging of William Edlin, it was understood that Warden Robert Sims, an opponent of the governor's policy, might, in order to delay the hanging, which has been set for Friday, adopt a course similar to the one which he used one week ago today, and refuse to execute the condemned men on the grounds that they were of unsound mind.

When questioned as to whether any influence would be brought to bear on Warden Sims to again delay the hanging of Edlin, Hunt replied:

"You can say for me that no further legal obstacles are going to be placed in the way of the proposed execution, and the condemned man is positively going to hang on Friday. While there has been a long fight by those of our citizens who do not believe in capital punishment, we feel at the present time that the last card has been played, and consequently all efforts to save the condemned men have about ceased altogether, and we are through. The element which has been clamoring for blood on the moon are about to have their way, and Friday next will see the fulfillment of their hopes, and a human life will be snuffed out in accordance with their wishes."

"In the fight which has been made to stave off the enforcement of the capital punishment measures of our state laws, I have taken an active part and have loved, the coward, cannot buy, because he is an artist and poor. In the rogue is seen the Jew who endeavors to trick his fellow-lodgers into buying a worthless silver mine and the cad is his partner. Self-interest reigns. Everyone is trying to 'do' everyone else. Into this crowd of gossiping, narrow people comes the Passerby. His influence on the fellow-lodgers forms the theme of the play. He is gentle, sympathetic and kindly. He sees the good that is in each and seeks to bring it out. The better side of life is shown to each person, and gradually they are made to realize what and wherein lies the beauty of living. There is no plot as plots are generally understood, but there are several sub-plots which tell of the lives and struggles of the various individuals in the play. Jerome has handled his theme delicately and deftly and the clever and acute characterization is in his best style."

DEDICATORY SERVICE—A new set of handsome chairs, which considerably improves the seating capacity, has been installed in the C. M. E. church at Seventh and Jefferson streets, and this evening a service, something in the nature of a dedication of the new fixtures, will be held. All of the members and their friends are invited to be present at this time.

PRESIDENT WON'T LET POSTMASTER OUST HIS CRITIC

George Burkitt.

President Wilson has requested Postmaster General Burkitt to re-instate George Burkitt, assistant postmaster at Winnetka, Ill., who was dismissed by Postmaster A. M. Klopfer at Winnetka because Burkitt declared President Wilson ought not to marry so soon after the death of the first Mrs. Wilson.

absolutely nothing to do with his inquiry. I only did what any other chief executive of the state would have done.

"And now we have reached a point where we feel it advisable to cease all efforts to compel the authorities of the state to make the taking of the lives of a few miserable wretches, all of whom are far from being normal human beings, and the execution will be carried out on Friday as per the program."

AMUSEMENTS

CROSS SECTION OF REAL LIFE

The scene of "Passing of the Third Floor Back," the play in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson will be seen during his farewell engagement at the Elks theater commencing tonight, 8 p. m. sharp, is laid in a lodging house in Bloomsbury Square, London. The people of the play are described by the author as a cheat, a snob, a pointed lady, a shrew, a bully, a snob, a hussy, a satyr, a coward, a rogue and a cad. The cheat is the landlady who robs her lodgers and the slattern is the slavey who cannot understand life and is about to lose her self-respect. The shrew and the bully are man and wife who have grown old bickering and quarrelling with each other. The snob was the wife of a retired potato salesman, long since dead, but before his death elevated to the rank of a baronet. The hussy, a young girl, is about to marry the satyr. He is wealthy and will give her the luxuries of a lover, the coward, cannot buy, because he is an artist and poor. In the rogue is seen the Jew who endeavors to trick his fellow-lodgers into buying a worthless silver mine and the cad is his partner. Self-interest reigns. Everyone is trying to "do" everyone else. Into this crowd of gossiping, narrow people comes the Passerby. His influence on the fellow-lodgers forms the theme of the play. He is gentle, sympathetic and kindly. He sees the good that is in each and seeks to bring it out. The better side of life is shown to each person, and gradually they are made to realize what and wherein lies the beauty of living. There is no plot as plots are generally understood, but there are several sub-plots which tell of the lives and struggles of the various individuals in the play. Jerome has handled his theme delicately and deftly and the clever and acute characterization is in his best style."

GEORGE FAWCETT IN "THE MAJESTY OF LAW"

George Fawcett, founder of the famous Fawcett Stock Company of Baltimore and identified with Maude Adams' "The Little Minister," "The Sign of the Cross," "The Man of the Hour" and many other historic productions, will be presented for the first time at the Arizona tonight in motion pictures in "The Majesty of the Law."

George Fawcett's sensational work in "The Sign of the Cross" is one of the favorite stories of the stage. "The Majesty of the Law" provides Fawcett with a typical Fawcett part, a gruff but secretly tender hearted old Virginia judge of absolute honor and uprightness. This will be presented at the Arizona tonight and tomorrow.

Lamara Theater—Wilton Lackaye, the creator of Svengali and many other distinguished roles will be seen at the Lamara Theater today and tomorrow in "The Man of Shame," a story of the third French emperor Napoleon. In this Broadway feature he is supported by beautiful Rosemary Theby, one of the most charming women of the motion picture firmament. Wilton Lackaye portrays a dual role in a masterly manner. The scenes were taken in Quebec leading to the similarity of the old French colonial city with that of the original story. Harry C. Myers has an important role in the picture in addition to his other duties. The care in properly costuming the characters adds greatly to the strength and beauty of the picture. This week's showing of the great American Serial, "Neat of the Navy," is among the most interesting of the entire series. It will be run today also.

blame on the young candidate who has withdrawn, and he is sent to jail. Ruby, as secretary to the politicians, causes them both to fall in love with her, hoping their rivalry will part them and reveal the hidden ballot boxes. Jealous over Ruby, the politicians quarrel, and not even the suffragette chief of police can reconcile them. How Ruby takes advantage of the quarrel and brings them to justice is the climax.

"THROUGH TROUBLED WATERS" AT EMPRESS

The feature attraction at the Empress for today and tomorrow is a three-part Broadway star, featuring Alfred Voshburgh, Anne Schaffer and Myrtle Gonzales, entitled "Through Troubled Waters," showing how a couple who were married, but had to be cast on a desert island where they bore many hardships before they found the true meaning of love, which endured through life, after their rescue and return to civilization. For the benefit of the children whom it is the aim to please, one of their favorites will be shown, "Dreamy Dud and the Old Swimming Hole," and an Essanay comedy, "All Stuck Up." The regular Hearst Selig Weekly will be shown.

Sunday and Monday the great V. L. E. Blue Ribbon feature, "The Choice of Courage," will be the attraction.

Forbes Robertson Seat Sale The unreserved section of the Elks theater will be placed on sale at noon today for the Forbes-Robertson engagement. Also many unreserved and cancelled reserved seat orders will be on sale during the day.

Double Show at Amuzu At the Amuzu today they are screening a double bill for the one price. The big animal picture, "Neath the Lion's Paw," in three reels, a one reel comedy and a big two reel special Joker comedy with Max Asher and his merry company will constitute the offering. Neath the Lion's Paw is a picture with few equals among animal stories woven with romance and adventure. It shows a woman thrown into a lion's den to be rescued when the man-enters are about to take her life. Six reels will be the dish served up the screen.
